EVIDENCE AT SENATE
INQUIRY

Senator And Counsel In Verbal Duel

Washington, To-day.

A scene between Senator Carter Glass and the interrogator Mr. Pecora, marked the resumption of the inquiry into the affairs of Messrs. J. P. Morgan and Company, the New York private bankers.

Senator Glass challenged Mr. Pecora's authority, declaring that the Committee's minutes disclosed no record of Mr. Pecora's employment as counsel.

Mr. Pecora, acidly retorted amidst applause, that the Committee could have his resignation for the asking.

The inquiry continued into the dealing of the utilities magnate, Mr. George Howard, President of the United Corporation, who testified that the Corporation had acquired, in 1929, certain utilities stock from Morgan's at $512,000, below the market price.

Howard said that Morgan's acquired a controlling interest in the United Corporation, which holds an interest in utilities companies going a large part of the gas and electric business of the country.

The Inquiry was adjourned until May 31.

Sensational Disclosures.

A serious political storm appears to be gathering following the revelation at the Senate inquiry into the working of the firm of J. P. Morgan and Company, that the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. W. H. Woodin, had certain dealings with the firm.

Washington, To-day.

The bill abolishing the gold standard in the United States, was introduced into the House of Representatives yesterday, by Mr. Stegall, Chairman of the Banking Committee of the House.

He said that the passage of the legislation would enable foreign debtors to pay war debts in any money which was legal in the United States.

The legislation was introduced at the request of President Roosevelt.

Mr. Stegall said that the Bill "frees the United States from the obstacles and handicaps of the gold standard." It was an Administration Bill and part of President Roosevelt's emergency relief programme.

The law will make it unnecessary for President Roosevelt to devalue the gold dollar under the inflation provisions of the Farm Relief Act.—Reuter.

SENSATIONAL PIRACY AT MIRS BAY

CAPTAIN WOUNDED IN ATTACK ON NORWEGIAN SHIP

14 PIRATES LOOT VESSEL, BUT NO-ONE KIDNAPPED.

THE MASTER OF THE NORWEGIAN STEAMER "PROMINENT," CAPT. H. JENSEN, WAS WOUNDED LAST NIGHT, WHEN 14 PIRATES ARMED WITH REVOLVERS SEIZED THE VESSEL IN MIRS BAY, AND AFTER LOOTING HER, ESCAPED IN BOATS, LANDING AT HA SHA.

The vessel was bound for Saigon and was only a few miles out of Hong Kong when the outrage occurred. Although the attack was made with surprising suddenness, a message was sent out and was picked up by No. 4 Police launch, which patrols the district.

The launch gave chase but failed to reach the ship before the pirates had escaped to the shore opposite Ping Chau Island, in MIRS Bay. No-one was kidnapped, and the extent of the looting is not yet known. The ship returned to Kowloon Bay this morning.

The s.s. Prominent which was rescued from pirates at 11 p.m. yesterday, had been in the hands of the pirates for two days. Her wireless distress signals were picked up by Nos. 1 and 4 Police Launches.

The No. 4 Police launch chased the pirated steamer in MIRS Bay and fired a three-pounder shell at the vessel, and the "Prominent" in the hands of the pirates, attempted to ram the Police launch. It is estimated by the Water Police that the Police chase took place in MIRS Bay about 20 miles from Hong Kong.

Bullet-Wound In The Leg.
The master of the s.s. Prominent, Captain H. Jensen, was taken to the Kowloon Hospital immediately on the arrival of the pirated vessel in Hong Kong harbour. He is suffering from a bullet wound in the left leg.

The steamer left Hong Kong on the evening of May 24, on a voyage to Saigon. She has been chartered by Messrs. Larsen, Karsten, & Co., local agents for the vessel, to the Nam Fat Steamship Co., of Saigon, for the period of one year. It is estimated that about 100 deck passengers were on board the vessel at the time of the piracy.

The Europeans on board numbered six, namely the Captain, two officers and three engineers. The Chinese crew totals 38. The local agents of the vessel, Messrs. Larsen, Karsten, & Co., are unable to furnish any details of the piracy at the present time, as full news has not yet reached their office.

The s.s. Prominent is a steel-hulled steamer of 2,232 tons gross, and is owned by Messrs. H. M.

NAVAL DISARMAMENT DEBATE

EXPLAINED TO COMMONS

Doctrine Of Neutrality Changed.

JAPAN'S CASE CITED BY MR. LANSBURY

Von Papen's "Terrible" Speech

London, To-day.

An important statement was made by the Foreign Secretary, Sir John Simon, in the debate on foreign affairs in the House of Commons, yesterday, when he declared that the United States' peace declaration constituted a fundamental change in her position in regard to the old doctrine of neutrality.

The fundamental principle of that doctrine before 1914 was the obligation on neutral States to show complete impartiality between two contending Powers. At Geneva, Mr. Norman Davis, the American representative, indicated that so far as America was concerned he was prepared to assert that the law of neutrality was being modified and that the United States Government were ready to contribute in other ways to the organisation of peace.

They were willing to consult with other States in the event of a threat to peace, with a view to action.

It was of first importance that they should not exaggerate or distort the declaration, by one hair's breadth. The United States insisted that it must preserve its own independent judgment as to what was right and what was wrong in connection with any dispute. They had no grounds whatever for complaining about this.

But if in some future conflict, the nations in consultation decided to take action that would prevent sustenance and succour going to a wrongdoer, Mr. Davis's declaration meant that the Government of the United States, if it agreed with a view of those other States in consultation, would refrain from any action tending to defeat the action which those States might take.

No Passive Policy.
In other words, the old idea of standing with folded arms between a nation which was an aggressor and a nation which was oppressed had gone. It was impossible to exaggerate the importance of this.

Sir John Simon explained, that in view of the declaration, alterations in the security part of the draft convention became necessary and he had prepared new draft providing that in the event of a breach, or a threat of a breach, an invitation for immediate consultation might be made by the League of Nations.

They had reason to believe that the United States would be prepared to enter into such a consultation, the object of which would be, firstly, to exchange views for the purpose of preserving peace in event of a threat of a breach of the Paris Pact.

Secondly, to use their good offices for the restoration of peace in the event of an actual breach of the Pact. Thirdly, in the event that it proved impossible thus to preserve peace, the object of the consultation would be to determine which party or parties to the dispute are to be held responsible.

He was happy indeed to find that Mr. Davis accepted these proposals, and that the United States proposed to associate herself with this part of the treaty by unilateral declaration, there being Constitutional difficulties in doing so in any other way.

Sir John Simon, while claiming that real progress had been made at Geneva, admitted that there were extremely disturbing stages.

YOUTH CAN LAST A LIFETIME.

Rational Philosophy.
Essential

GROW OLD GRACEFULLY.

It is by no means always easy to grow old gracefully. So much depends on the mental soil and how we adopt ourselves to the inevitable influences that the advancing years bring.

As old age approaches there is less to look forward to, the instinctive impulses of youth and middle age that gave us goals to strive for are on the wane, and our declining capacities, both mental and physical, tend to obtrude themselves on our notice. Then we are only too apt to react to life abnormally.

It may be that age becomes an obsession. As the future holds out so little, the past is dwelt on unduly. Jealousy and envy of the young generation cause bitterness. Pleasure is only gained through the revival of memories of bygone days.

Exaggerated introspection, the nursing of vain regrets, and an increasing seclusiveness are frequent unhealthy results.

All these factors aid in laying the foundation of a morbid depression which, as the years creep on, is liable to cloud the mind.

One other mental tendency of advancing years is a subtle diminution of self-control. It is then that the weak points of the personality may show themselves.

Temperament Pitfalls.

Impulses previously held in abeyance and perhaps even disguised from the individual himself are no longer adequately checked, but find an outlet in ways which are frequently of an anti-social nature.

Some insight, however, into the pitfalls that beset us can materially help in obviating the harmful mental tendencies.

Those who have always possessed a pessimistic temperament will be especially prone to fall victims to melancholy at this period, but there is no reason why everybody should not grow old healthfully.

It is essential that a rational philosophy should be adopted and the varied factors of life seen in their true perspective.

Continued work and usefulness to others constitute a safeguard against the feeling that there is little to live for. The more external interests are developed and sustained, the less chance is there of falling back on the self with all its attendant dangers.

Many a man on retiring from his occupation has gone downhill mentally because he has had nothing else to distract him.

If our mental energy is directed inwards instead of outwards, depression is invited. For this reason hobbies are of great value, especially those which give some outlet to the undercurrents of the personality.

Social Habits.

The keeping up of active social habits, too, is of enormous importance. Good-fellowship and conviviality are the finest of mental tonics and banishers of gloom.

Though the body has to grow old, we should endeavour to retain a youthful mind with all its enthusiasms and adaptability. Every period of life has its special compensations, and we can grow old gracefully and happily, if we will.

GIVING THE CHILD A CHANCE

Preparing Him For Life.

PREVENTING "MISFATS"

Schools, to be efficient in turning out young people fitted to cope with life, should give much more attention to the "inner" side of a child's life, in other words, there should be much more "psychological" study of the child than there is at present.

Each school should have a trained psychologist who can study the child and advise it about its intimate problems and its future. But until we have this desirable state of things, it seems that parents will have to tackle the job themselves.

Misfits.

There are many misfits in the world to-day, boys and girls put into the wrong career, partly because parents did not know what other openings there are and partly because they just don't know anything about their child's character and how that character will tell on his or her future work.

If you have a very original, rebellious, "difficult" child, in order to make him happy, you will need to find him a job that will enable him to express himself if he is put into a routine job he will be wretchedly unhappy, and probably a failure.

Girls without a scrap of originality or initiative are put into educational work when they should be doing some job, like office work, that requires patient attention to detail and routine but not much personal initiative.

Others are put into routine work of this sort when they are craving to be doing artistic or social or outdoor work.

Study Character.

Girls definitely intended by Nature to be mothers are not allowed to use up this mothering character by being nurses, teachers, or workers amongst animals.

Do, when you wonder what your child is going to train for, study her or his character.

Don't let them be misfits. The temperamental qualification for a job is much more important than the mental one, and that what your child does in actual "book work" at school does not matter so much as what he or she is in character and temperament.

BACKLESS DINNER FROCKS

Many of the backless dinner frocks are quite short, eight, ten, sometimes even 12 inches off the floor, which puts them in the all-day class; there can be no doubt that at Summer resorts they will often be worn from morn till midnight and beyond.

BRIDGE NOTES

FORCING TAKE-OUT BY OPENER.

(By A. E. MANNING FOSTER.)

Still more interesting than the aspects of the system with which I have dealt in previous articles is the forcing take-out by the initial opener after a minimum response from partner. This occurs when the Dealer or first bidder has more values in his hand than he has disclosed by his original call. It happens frequently when playing the strong "Two" that the Declarer has more this is necessary for a bid of "One," but not quite enough for the initial forcing "Two." Or the distribution may be unfavourable for that bid. Here, when his partner makes the minimum response of "One" of a suit or "One No-Trump," he uses the forcing take-out. The method of doing so is by a jump bid in a new suit. Thus Z "One Heart"; A "No bid"; Y "One Spade"; B "No bid"; If Z now bids "Three Diamonds" or "Three Clubs" his bid is forcing and Y must re-bid to keep the bidding open.

The implication is obvious. Y must hold a biddable suit of Spades and have in his hand at least one and a half quick tricks. Z, instead of the two and a half quick tricks he originally revealed, has four. Add these to Y's and there is almost certain game, somewhere. Note, again, that Z's bid does not deny necessarily the Spade suit. He may wish to support that suit later. But Z's immediate purpose is to "test the market" and he promises, probably but not certainly, a game bid eventually. Y has only to obey orders and to keep the bidding alive. He must trust Z implicitly, knowing that he would not have embarked upon the expedition without just reason.

If Z had wished merely to deny the Spades he would have called "Two Diamonds." If he had decreed to co-operate in Spades at once he would have called "Two" or "Three Spades." Or he might have declared "Two No-Trumps"—not forcing. Or he might have re-bid his Hearts or bid "Three No-Trumps" or pre-empted in Diamonds or Clubs by bidding "Four." Z has, however, taken none of these courses. He has chosen to make a forcing take-out of "Three" of a minor suit and Y must accept the position. If he has nothing further to disclose and his suit is not long enough to re-bid he must bid "Three No-Trumps" and there it is likely to be left. But if he has support in the new suit called and no sound re-bid of his Spades and no other suit to disclose he must bid "Four" of the minor, if he holds four of the suit. An example from play will illustrate:—

Spade—A, Q, 8, 7, 2
Heart—5
Diamond—6, 5, 4, 3
Club—9, 4, 3

A:—
B:—
Z:—

Spade—6
Heart—A, K, 9, 4, 3
Diamond—A, K, J, 10, 8
Club—K, 7

Z deals and bids "One Heart"; A "No bid"; Y "One Spade"; B "No bid"; Z "Three Diamonds"; A "No bid"; Here Y should bid "Four Diamonds" not "Three No-Trumps." Z's bid is forcing, but Y's suit of Spades is not strong enough for a re-bid of that suit. He must, however, keep the bidding alive and his proper response is in Diamonds. This assures Z that Y has nothing further to show and he exercises his discretion as to whether to bid "Five Diamonds" or leave it at "Four." Mark that Z is not bound in these circumstances to go on if he does not wish to do so. But with his hand on the bidding, even with minimum indications from Y, it would be indeed pusillanimous for him not to do so. He should bid "Five Diamonds" and, except for an extremely unfavourable distribution, he should make them. It must be realised that when Z makes a forcing re-bid on minimum quick trick strength, it is for him to decide whether to advance to game or slam. The responsibility is on him, and he may elect to allow the bidding to die short of a game or a slam declaration. Here is a case in point.

Y:—
Spade—A, 7, 6, 5
Heart—Q, J, 10, 6, 4
Diamond—5, 2
Club—A, 3

B:—
Z:—

Spade—K, Q, J, 4
Heart—A, 3
Diamond—K, J, 7
Club—K, Q, 8, 6

Score, love-all. Z deals and his initial bid is a matter of opinion. He has the choice of three bids: (1) "One No-Trump," which many English players would favour, or (2) "One Spade," or (3) "One Club."

Although no one could, I imagine, assert that a bid of "One No-Trump" would be wrong—some players would bid "Two No-Trumps" on it—I prefer the approach method and definitely select "One Club" as the best bid. This is contrary to the theory that with two suits of equal length the higher ranking suit should be called first. The Spades are stronger than the Clubs. Why not then bid "One Spade"? The reason for my preference for the "One Club" bid is that it allows the exchange of information more easily while the bidding is low. To bid the Spades first and the Clubs on second round might well convey a "wrong picture of the holdings."

With a four suit minor lacking the Ace, it is, in cases of this kind, better to open with it rather than with the major, which can be shown on second round. There is little danger on Z's hand of the bid of "One Club" being left in. Either his partner or the opponents are going to speak and give him a second chance. In actual play the bidding went: A and B remaining silent; Z, "One Club"; Y, "One Heart"; Z, "Two Spades" (a forcing re-bid); Y, "Five Spades." This bid of "Five Spades" was a direct invitation to Z to bid a slam, but it was not a forcing bid. Very wisely Z refused it, because he knew nothing about the Aces. While Y had assured him of considerable support in Spades, all Z knew was that Y had a biddable suit of Hearts, and probably something outside. Many players would, in this situation, advance to a little slam, but Z, having made his force, was content to play the game in "Five Spades."

The point of these examples is that, while the force compels partner to keep the bidding alive, there is no compulsion of a like nature on the forcer. In the first example Z could, if he liked, leave the bidding at "Four Diamonds." Being himself the forcer, there was no obligation upon him to make a game call. Similarly, in the second example, while Y's bid of "Five Spades" suggested possibilities of a slam, Z could use his own discretion. I should like to stress this point, because I find constantly misunderstanding about it. The player who has assumed captaincy of his side is the one to choose when the bidding shall cease. His partner has rarely obeyed orders. If the Captain has

WISE AND OTHERWISE

Tale of the Day.

Mother: "But why did you fight with this boy—a total stranger?"
Small Son: "Well, mother, all my friends were away."

The Dear Things.

Women's finger nails will be decorated by letters, pictures and emblems, instead of being tinted, according to the latest fashion decrees of beauty-shop owners whose annual convention has opened in New York.

One favourite letter set for eight fingers now in use spells out "I Love You." Other talking finger messages are: "Be True to Me" and "Happy Days."

Pictures for finger nails include fruit, flowers animals and scenes of mountains and countryside painted with the miniaturist's art. A Bridge set supplies each hand with one Spade, a Heart, a Diamond and a Club, and it is hoped that feminine players will be ethical enough not to use their fingers as signals to their partners.

Some of the more pertinent legends to be painted on the finger nails will be "Quit Kiddin'" and "Aw Leave Or."

Miss Dithy Dox.

Dear Dithy Dox—I am girl of 18 very much in love with a boy. We go on parties and every time he gets drunk he asks me to marry him, but when he is sober he doesn't mention it. What would you advise me to do about it?

Kinda Fuzzled.
Look after your own interests my dear. Act quickly, the lad might go teetotal at any moment.

Dithy Dox.
Dear Miss Dox—Is the kind of love when one can't eat, sleep and so forth absolutely necessary to make marriage a success? In most marriages don't you think that love is stronger on one side than the other? Can a marriage be a success if the girl's love is stronger than that of the young man's? He loves her very much, but cannot say he loves her desperately. Would it be taking a chance for her to marry him?

A Reader.
You're not in love, my girl. You're just suffering from indigestion. Small quantities of bicarbonate of soda taken in water may be of assistance.

Dithy Dox.
Dear Miss Dox—For the last month of my summer vacation I went rather regularly with a beautiful girl in my home town. She has the kindest, sweetest, most amiable disposition. She is everything a man could pray for, and more, except that she virtually has no education while I love the higher things of life—good literature, drama, etc., and some day I expect to be a lawyer. I feel that unless my wife can understand me to a reasonable extent we won't be happy, yet I am crazy about this girl. Do you think I would be happy if I married her?

Albert.
Albert, you sound like a wet hen; you, a married man, blithering about your love for this young girl. Don't divorce your wife. If you do you'll only have to pay alimony and as you probably know love sneaks at overdrafts.

Dithy Dox.
I merely offered his partner a choice of suits, the selection of that particular suit is no intimation of additional values, and the Captain may not see game in it, and therefore need not bid at all. Further, even when partner issues a slam invitation, the Captain is not obliged to respond, and if he has made his forcing re-bid on minimum quick-trick strength, he certainly should not do so.

ROMEO AND JULIET MUSEUM

Verona's Tribute To Shakespeare.

INSCRIPTION CONTROVERSY

Verona.
A Romeo and Juliet museum is to be created here in the house where it is believed that Juliet lived.

But the Municipal Council, in planning the museum, are divided on the inscription which is to appear on the building.

At present the inscription reads: "This was the house of the Capuleti, from which came Juliet for whom gentle hearts wept and poets sang."

But the theory that Romeo and Juliet never existed has been revived and advocates of the theory suggest this inscription: "In this house popular tradition narrates that Juliet lived, whose amorous and grievous adventures suggested to the greatest modern tragedian an immortal drama and moved to pity the whole civilised world."

This inscription, it is claimed, would be more in accordance with the facts and would include a tribute to Shakespeare, to whom Verona owes so much.

The supporters of the theory say that the Capuleti were a faction of the city, and not a family—Reuter.

POP — Easily Seen, Pop's Appetite Needs Satisfying.

AROUND THE FAIR

Yesterday's Record Crowds; Exhibitors Report Many Sales And Enquiries; Football Kicked About The Stands At Night.

A very large attendance was seen at the Empire Fair yesterday, most of the sightseers being Chinese. All stands had their quota of visitors, and it was difficult to move from place to place owing to the large number of people present.

It has been stated by exhibitors that owing to the large number of the coolie class present, many prospective buyers have been kept away from the various stands. In their opinion an admittance fee should have been charged, as this would have kept out that class which came merely out of curiosity.

Constant Sales.

Sales at the Empire Fair have been constant, especially in small goods. Canned goods of all kinds sold well. Motor-cars had a steady sale, and many orders are expected to materialise as a result of enquiries made by prospective buyers at the Fair.

Machinery also has had a certain sale, such as deisel engines and electric motors. Neonlite Signs also have attracted buyers. Dairy produce from Australia and New Zealand as well as fresh and canned fruits have sold in large quantities. Timber from Canada, Australia and New Zealand has also sold to a certain extent.

Portrait of Prince of Wales.

The picture of His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales, which has aroused considerable interest on the Hford Photographic Supply Stand, may shortly adorn the wall of the Royal Air Force Officers' Mess at Kai Tak.

Nor is this the only offer for the almost life-size photograph; an air transportation company in Borneo are anxious to secure the picture. Offers have been made for the other pictures, also.

Football Kicked About

The Stands.

It was stated by an attendant that on Thursday evening, after the Fair had closed, a certain amount of hooliganism had taken place. A number of Europeans who had evidently dined well rather than wisely, raided a stand, and helping themselves to rugby footballs, had damaged exhibits by kicking the balls about among the stands.

Handbag Stolen.

Although losses from stalls this year appear to be generally lighter than at the Empire Fair last year, considerable pilfering of goods has occurred in spite of the close watch kept by the police.

A Chinese lady attendant at Messrs. Windsor and Newton's display, had her handbag stolen from the stall yesterday evening, the thief apparently having thrust his hand through from the back of the stall to the shelf on which the bag was lying. The bag, fortunately did not contain a great sum of money.

Bedford and Beds.

A certain Chinese seeing the Legend Vauxhall Motors Ltd., Luton Beds, pondered over it for some time before asking a European bystander, "What kind of beds are Luton Beds?"

Five Ford Sales.

Five Ford V8 model cars have been sold at the stand of Messrs. Wallace Harper and Company. The revolving turntable on which one of the models is mounted has caused much interest, and it is interesting to note that the complete apparatus is made from Ford parts.

A tractor wheel forms the base of the turntable, while a truck frame forms the platform. The whole is driven by a small cylinder re-boring outfit.

"Armoured Glass."

The unshatterable glass used in all Austin motor-cars is proving to be also unbreakable. The 4½ lb lead weight dropped on to the glass, but it still remained intact yesterday evening.

The lead weight shows considerable signs of the rough usage and the wooden frame in which the glass is mounted has had to be reinforced with screws, but the glass refused to be broken or even cracked. Armoured glass they call it!

Radio Gramophone.

A radio gramophone on Messrs. Williamson's stall in the Australian section, was sold yesterday.

300 Enquiries A Day.

Three hundred enquiries per day, the stall stocked with line for which it is estimated, have been made at Messrs. John D. Hutchison are agents. Best sellers are reported to be Gibbs toilet requisites and Horlicks Malted Milk.

Cooking Demonstration.

The cooking demonstration with Messrs. Simpson's Self-Raising Flour in a Moffat Stove was a centre of interest for ladies during the cooking demonstrations, which were conducted by Mrs. Eagan, assisted by the No. 1 Chinese chef of the Peninsula Hotel. Among the recipes demonstrated were French Pancakes, Shortcake, Sponge-cake, Lemon Pie and Madeira Cake.

The children had a glorious time sampling the delicious cooking.

Pianos.

The Tsang Fook Piano Company have on view their famous Morrison Baby Grand and Upright Piano which are specially built for tropical climates. Guaranteed for ten years those pianos have an artistic appearance and a true tone.

Thirty years practical experience in the making of the Morrison Piano combined with English and Canadian materials makes this famous piano one of the outstanding exhibits at the Fair.

This firm also stocks a large and varied selection of classic, dance and instrumental music, and an excellent variety of the latest models of His Master's Voice Portable Gramophones in blue and red.

Poultry Display.

The Poultry section attracted a large crowd of interested spectators who were surprised at the excellent display on view.

Pedigree birds of the various breeds deserve special mention while the multitude of day old chicks delighted the hearts of the youngsters.

The display of canaries of the more popular English breeds caused favourable comment and gave an added attraction to the display of live stock.

SUPPORT FOR OLD RURAL CRAFTS

Motion Before House Of Commons.

DEVELOPMENT FUND SUCCESS

London.

Another move to revive the old rural crafts and industries of England has been taken—this time in the House of Commons.

Only a few days after Mr. A. W. Marshall, a past President of the Society of Model and Experimental engineers had made a plea for the dying crafts of England, the matter was brought up in Parliament by Brigadier-General Clifton-Brown, Conservative member for Newbury.

He moved a resolution—which was passed—stating:

"That this House is of opinion that the encouragement of rural industries and the maintenance of a thriving and contented village life, together with a prosperous agriculture, are vital to this country, and urges the Government to take every possible step in this direction."

Thatching, brick-making, flax-milling, saddlery, black-smith and wheelwrights' work were among the industries to which the General referred.

One of the most interesting speeches in this debate was made by the member for Hereford, Mr. J. P. L. Thomas. He said that since 1921 the Government had given help to rural industries from the Development Fund, and it had worked most successfully in 18 countries. They had set about making great strides in the Hereford woollen tweed industry and had found markets in South America, South Africa, Czechoslovakia, Ceylon and Denmark. Now they were developing a light-weight tweed suitable for tropical countries.

LANE CRAWFORD'S AT THE FAIR

Attractive Display Of British Goods.

LIST OF AGENCIES

One of the most attractive of displays by any firm in the Peninsular Hotel, is that of Messrs. Lane Crawford, Ltd., whose exhibits are situated just to the left of the front entrance of the building.

One display which gained the admiration of all passers-by was that of silver-ware and cutlery. This old established "All British" house adopted as its watchwords "Quality and Integrity" and since its inception in 1850 has adhered to the policy of supplying only first-class merchandise and giving value for money.

Displayed for exhibition at their stand, is a representative range of goods produced by the following manufacturers:—

Mappin & Webb, Ltd.—Sterling Silver & Electro Plate Ware.
Lincoln Bennett & Co., Ltd.—Hats for Ladies and Men.
Donaldson Manufacturing Co.—Rangefinder Rapier Steel Shafted Golf Clubs and Golf Requisites.

Burroughes & Watts—Billiard Tables and Billiard Accessories.
Mansfield & Sons, Ltd.—Ladies' & Men's Shoes.
Dunn Bennett—China-ware.
Gourock Rope-work Co.—Birkmyre Canvas and Rope.

Cutter Palmer—Wines & Spirits.
Arch. Eadie & Co., Ltd.—Faints & Oils.
Daniel Crawford & Son, Ltd.—Whisky.

J. N. R. Tennent, Ltd.—"T" Beer and Stout.

All of these Manufacturers have gained world-wide recognition for the quality of their products.

These are just a few of the Agencies held by Lane Crawford, Ltd., but the allotted space at the Fair is insufficient to do justice to the stocks carried.

Roughly 90 per cent. of the firm's merchandise are "Empire" products, and the above mentioned agencies represent leading manufacturers.

An invitation is extended to visit the Company's Main Store in Exchange Building, where special displays have been arranged in all departments. Exhibits are there to interest every one, no matter what their requirements.

APPOINTMENTS ARE BROKEN

Hairdresser Awarded £1 Damages.

London.

The Judge at Northampton County Court, in awarding £1 damages against a husband whose wife failed to keep an appointment for a permanent wave, said "every year hundreds of women made appointments and failed to keep them, as men well knew, and as hairdressers well knew."

But the hairdressers disagree. The manager of a West End hairdressing establishment declares that "women, when they really want to keep appointments, are much more punctual than men."

He says that not more than five women out of 100 will be late for a permanent wave appointment.

The Washington Conversations.

President Roosevelt's series of conversations at Washington with representatives of the leading nations, begun by Mr. Ramsay MacDonald and M. Herriot, are not yet concluded, although the World Economic Conference opens on June 12. German, Italian and Chinese delegates have called and departed, and now Japan's representative is in informal Conference with America's President, who is hearing all national views on the situation, so as to ascertain the bearing of their economy on the proposals to be set forth in London. Gatherings of this kind have their advantages over more formal discussions, inasmuch as the principle of give and take can be more readily accepted than by putting set motions to a vote. But the procedure is apt to favour the strongest party, because it can bring pressure to bear at each separate meeting instead of making the application of pressure at a full gathering. In the present state of the world it is not the application of power that is wanted, but a large appreciation of reasonableness in negotiation, and an understanding that to-day the best of nationalists is he who seeks the good of the world as a whole, because in seeking the world's good he is really seeking the good of his own nation. Veiled attempts or avowed intentions of seeking national advantage without heed of what other nations may suffer will not achieve their object. The prosperity of each nation is wrapped up in the prosperity of its neighbours. The more the number of nations which gain prosperity, the more prosperous will each nation be. For three generations British statesmen have held the view of the economic interdependence of nations and have endeavoured to shape their policy to that end. Differences among them there have been. The differences have concerned not the policy but the means of bringing about the end sought by the policy. In his endeavours towards that end Mr. Ramsay MacDonald was just as earnest in his accomplishments at Lausanne, and was later in his endeavours at Washington, as were British statesmen of eleven years ago in proposing to the creditor nations a general remission of inter-Governmental debts. Lausanne determined the requisites for settling the world on the path to prosperity to be a freer international trade, its complement, general monetary stability, and remission of inter-Governmental debts. Of these up to last month the United States stood only for the second, but has not been able to retain the stability that was hers. She has gone off the gold standard, and there are demands from her citizens for inflation, demands which are in process of fulfilment. For abandoning monetary stability in order to give herself better competitive power in world trade, she has been censured by many. Why? She has done simply what others have done. But whether she will gain all that she hopes for by thus deprecating her currency, unless she gives her debtors the benefit of that depreciation as Britain has done, is doubtful. The bond which the United States lender takes as security demands payment in gold currency of the weight and fineness existent at the time of contracting the debt. The great hope is that with the United States, obeying so pronounced a popular clamour and following in the currency footsteps of many other countries, the way may be cleared for placing monetary standards on a stable basis which will be mutually advantageous. President Roosevelt all through his campaign emphasised the necessity for a lowering of the tariff wall, and the Democratic majorities in the House and in the Senate are an earnest of the general desires of the people. The United States, with all its twelve million of unemployed, is prepared to welcome proposals for reciprocal tariff reductions. On the third requisite to end the world-wide deflation which has brought so much misery to all countries—the remission of inter-Governmental debts—the President does not yet dare to make any definite stand. The service of the inter-Governmental debts has paid a large part of the interest of the national debt of the United States. Its remission would throw the payment of the interest onto the United States taxpayer. Why, the taxpayer asks, should he pay taxes to provide 243,721,000 dollars in instalments due by foreign countries, and this especially since his own income has fallen? Though it is true that cancellation of foreign countries to buy more United States goods, and especially so sought by the policy. In his present cost still hides from him the indirect and ultimate good. That President Roosevelt in the matter of the debts dare go no further than consent to postponement, or perhaps reduction, must be recognised. Our hope must be that recognition of the true position will not come too late to the people of the United States.

HERE, THERE and EVERYWHERE

Skyscraper Congestion.

Mr. Joseph Emberton, the architect who designed the Empire Hall at Olympia, recently suggested that London should be rebuilt in a series of towers, separated by many acres from one another in order to relieve traffic congestion and solve the slum problem. Another architect, Mr. Philip G. Freeman, disagrees with this suggestion, and gives his reasons in an interesting letter.

Mr. Freeman declares that tall buildings cause rather than relieve traffic congestion, and says that this is proved by the fact that in New York and Chicago congestion occurs at the base of the skyscrapers, where people arriving by various forms of transport change and travel in lifts to the large number of floors in the building. In a London rebuilt on Mr. Emberton's plan, he adds, such congestion would be greater in the case of office towers than in apartment towers.

London Average Higher.

Mr. Freeman points out that the average height of New York buildings is lower than those of London, New York being composed of tall skyscraper towers rising from large areas of four to five stories in height. These lower building areas do not suffer in themselves from traffic congestion. It is caused by the rush of people to the bases of the skyscraper towers. Even the varying of hours of arrival and departure of the office workers and the use of a highly efficient service of lifts travelling at 1,000 feet a minute do not overcome the difficulty. Many American skyscraper architects, says Mr. Freeman, now think that the ideal plan for a city is to limit the height of building to seven or eight stories, as in parts of London to-day, and lay out these buildings at a reasonable distance apart on wide boulevards with adequate parking space.

Facts You Did Not Know.

Mechanism that receives and records incoming telephone messages and that calls up persons and sends messages to them at set times has been invented by a New York man.

Scientists from the United States have discovered in Venezuelan mountains a forest composed of trees apparently like those that grew in North America in prehistoric times.

Double-cone shaped drums with indentations on their surfaces supporting an open framework form a new speed boat that is drawn over the water by a motor driven airplane propeller.

In spite of its excellent inland waterways and large coast line France has only about 4,000 motorboats and the number has been gradually decreasing for several years.

Weighing only five pounds, a home-laundry machine has been invented that is operated by attaching a vacuum cleaner to it to blow water through clothing to be washed.

News In Brief.

"The management of the Peninsula Hotel wish to inform patrons attending the Gala Night on Saturday, May 27, that cocktails will be served on the First Floor Lounge."

Notification is made in the current Hong Kong Government Gazette, that the valuation lists for the Colony for the year 1933-34, will be open to inspection at the Treasury, for 21 days commencing on Monday, May 29.

In view of the heavy bookings for the Gala Night in the Rose Room of the Peninsula Hotel to-night, the Roof Garden of that establishment will also be used for the occasion, augmenting further band arrangements. In the circumstances, the usual Saturday night dinner dance at the Repulse Bay Hotel will not take place.

SPEED AS LESSON FROM NATURE WHAT BIRDS, BEAST AND FISH TEACH US

90 M.P.H. GOLDEN PLOVER

(By J. WENTWORTH DAY.)

Golden plover, flickering like bullets over the coastal marsh at a mile and a half a minute. . . . Elephants stampeding at an earth-quaking 25 miles an hour. . . . The giant torpedo-shaped tunny shooting through water at three-quarters of a mile a minute. . . .

The disparity between the speeds achieved by living creatures and those set up within present memory by inanimate, mechanically propelled vehicles on land and water and in the air makes more than ever ridiculous the warnings dinned into our grandparents' ears that a speed of a mile a minute on the new-fangled railways would be fatal, for the blood would congeal and the heart would stop.

Many people solemnly believed that seventy years ago. They never took the golden plover into account nor learned a lesson from the peregrine's sickening stoop.

Oddly, but truthfully, we have not bothered to find out much about the speeds of birds, animals or fish until within the last few years. Little by little the truth is being discovered. Birds, animals or fish until within the last few years. Little by little the truth is being discovered. Birds, animals and fish all travel far faster than was imagined. I have been able to collect data on the subject from researches and experience of such men as Colonel the Master of Semple, Sir Malcolm Campbell, Mr. Kaye Don, Commander David Blunt, late Government Officer in Charge of Elephant Control in Tanganyika, Captain David Wolfe-Murray, the falconer, and Captain C. W. R. Knight, the bird photographer and authority on hawking. Their notes, added to those collected by other authorities, make a most fascinating summary of quite remarkable interest.

Bird speeds have been more or less accurately determined. But their aerodynamics have not yet been fully explored.

"Segrave Meteor"

The late Sir Henry Segrave told when he was designing the "Segrave Meteor," then the most perfectly streamlined airplane in the world, that he was convinced that if only he could ascertain the exact resistance of a bird in flight, and determine its aerodynamics, he would be able to build a crash-proof, fool-proof machine capable of going anywhere in almost any weather.

So, because we know most about them, we will consider birds first. These estimates are based on speeds timed from airplanes, trains, motorcars and by falconers following birds in level flight through still air.

The fastest is probably the golden plover, whose lonely whistle epitomises the soul of sea-march and sodden moorland.

Next comes the teal. If you have ever stood under a sea wall in the dim light of stars or crouched in a reed butt by the edge of broad or mere, and seen teal shoot suddenly, startlingly, overhead like bolts from a cross-bow, it is not difficult to accept the estimate of their maximum speed, made by an airman, as 70 miles an hour.

The peregrine falcon is not really so fast as one thinks. It is that sudden, stupendous stoop from the blue, when, with wings half shut, he falls like a bolt and binds to his quarry, which has given birth to the popular illusion that the peregrine is the "fastest bird on earth." He may, and probably does, touch 80 miles an hour when stooping. But in level flight he seldom exceeds sixty-two.

Mill-A-Minute Grouse.

The grouse, particularly an old cock who knows a thing or two, can do his mile a minute flat out. The mallard, merlin, blue-rock round about 55 miles an hour, while most remarkable of all, that unsuspected speedster, the heron, can match them—if he has a falcon on his tail.

The heron, indeed, is the dark horse of ornithological speeds. In spite of his methodical wing beats as he drifts lethargically across the sky, like a blown rag, legs trailing, neck bent back, he is actually flying at more than three-quarters of a mile a minute.

Yet the wood pigeon, whose noisy clatter and general wide-awakeness give the impression that he is the liveliest wire in the air, is comparatively slow compared with game birds. He achieves a mere 45 miles an hour all out. Even more oddly, the swallow does not average more than 30.

Many animals present unexpected capabilities of speed. The elephant, for example, dozens of which have been timed by Commander Blunt—who has shot 167 steadily at eight miles an hour for miles and keep up the "long step" on migration at five miles an hour for 50 miles. He charges at between 20 and 25 miles per hour.

Captain J. C. Dollman, Assistant Director of the Natural History Museum at South Kensington, tells me that he considers the cheetah, the hunting leopard of India, capable of a mile a minute.

My friend Mr. David Pollock, the Acting District Officer at Mbeya, in Tanganyika, a reliable and painstaking naturalist, has timed Thompson's gazelle at 50 miles an hour, and considers it the fastest animal in Africa. He estimates the speed of the giraffe at 35 miles an hour, three miles an hour faster than those timed on his motor-car speedometer by Mr. Marius Maxwell, the distinguished big-game photographer.

The ostrich probably sprints at 35 miles an hour, while both Blunt and Pollock agree that the jackal hunts at the same speed and the Cape buffalo charges at 35.

Most extraordinary of all is the statement of Mr. Maxwell that the black rhino charges at 20 miles an hour, more than 12 yards in two seconds, fast time for a ton or two of short-legged pachyderm.

When we remember that the Derby is run at an average speed of 45 miles an hour we obtain a good standard of comparison by which to judge these speeds. Who, for example, having seen an old sow, stertorous and somnolent among her litter, would imagine the wild pig capable of half a mile a minute? Pig-stickers need no reminder.

Lot To Be Learned.

A lot has yet to be learned about animal speeds, but still more remains to be discovered in fish life. Such painstaking authorities as Colonel Harding, Mr. W. L. Calderwood and Mr. F. W. Frohawk have done much. But they are only on the fringe.

Tunny, running from 200 to 1,000 pounds in weight, the giant mackerel of the sea, are estimated to be capable of 45 miles per hour for a short distance. Increased knowledge about the tunny will greatly assist designers of submarines.

APPETITE BASED ON OCCUPATION.

Housewife Eats As Much As Male Clerk.

London. The Ministry of Labour declares that a woman needs only 0.85 of the food required by a man. But Miss Gladys Mann, the cookery expert, says that the quantity of food required is not so much a question of sex as it is occupation. She thinks a housewife and a man in an office have about the same appetites—2,500 calories worth.

Experiments, according to Professor A. M. Low, have proved that a man doing hard muscular work requires 4,000 calories; a man doing light muscular work 3,000 to 3,500; and a woman doing moderate muscular work 3,000. Bunter.

Many Sales Made At The Fair

Exhibitors Satisfied With Results

ENQUIRIES EXPECTED TO LEAD TO INCREASED BUSINESS

The British Empire Fair is an unqualified success according to all exhibitors questioned by a representative of the "China Mail." All agree that the Fair has tended to increase their sales, directly or indirectly.

Thousands of people have thronged the Fair day after day, and though many of these have been intent more on sightseeing and the collection of samples than actual buying, yet many genuine buyers have approached stand-holders.

All exhibitors questioned stated that it would have been of great benefit if an admission fee had been charged, for this would have tended to keep out mere loiterers, and given bona fide buyers more opportunity of viewing the exhibits. Stand-holders state that they have had more genuine enquiries during yesterday than at any other period of the Fair. The mere sightseer had then had his fill, and people really intending to buy were more in evidence.

It is stated that the best period from the business point of view is in the evening, from about 6 to 8 o'clock, when the business man who has been at the office all day has leisure to look about him.

The secretary of the Fair Committee, Mr. M. F. Key, stated that the stands inside the Peninsula will close at 6 p.m. to-night, in order that the Hotel Company may have time to prepare for the gala which is being held. Outside the Hotel, the stands will remain open until 10 p.m.

Australian Exhibits

Mr. J. A. Tonkin, representing the Department of Commerce, of the Australian Commonwealth Government, expressed himself as being very satisfied with the results of the Fair to a representative of the "China Mail." He said that he had opened two stalls on behalf of the Commonwealth Government, and many private exhibitors of Australian goods had occupied stalls beside his.

The Government stalls had been interested more in displaying samples of goods than in actual sales at the Fair. He said that he had received numerous enquiries regarding all types of Australian products, notably canned fruits and hams, etc.

Private stand-holders in the Australian section stated that they were doing a roaring trade. They had encountered a great demand for fresh and canned fruits and other types of bottled and canned goods.

Mr. Tonkin stated that Australia had for some time done a great deal of business with Hong Kong, China and Japan. About half her wheat found a market in China and Japan, while her wool was exported in great quantities to the Far East. On his return to Australia, he stated that he would make a report to the Commonwealth Government in which he would draw attention to the great market for Australian goods that existed in Hong Kong and South China.

New Zealand Sales

Mr. S. T. Williamson, Hon. Agent for the Dominion of New Zealand also expressed himself as being satisfied with the result of the Fair as regards New Zealand products.

The chief articles in demand are dairy produce and fruit of all kinds. A large number of sales were taking place at the Fair and many more were expected from enquiries made by tentative buyers.

It is expected that as a result of the Fair, many agents for both Australian and New Zealand goods would be appointed. Both the Commonwealth and the Dominion realised that South China was a great potential buyer of all types of produce.

Canadian Exhibits

The Canadian Trade Commissioner, Major E. E. Duclos, when

interviewed, said that the Canadian exhibits were rather out of the way, being situated in the Moorish bar. Nevertheless many people had visited that section of the Fair. So many people had made enquiries that it was difficult to know who were bona fide buyers and who were not.

Major Duclos stated that certain enquiries had been received regarding the sale of between 60,000 and 100,000 railway sleepers to Canton, and it was expected that this deal would be closed shortly. A Curtiss Reid aeroplane, manufactured in Canada, was on display before the Hotel, and Major Duclos said that it was his intention to ask Major Doolittle, the American air ace, to demonstrate the machine on his return to the Colony. This machine is similar to the Curtiss Wright machine which the famous airman flew in Canton on his recent trip.

Major Duclos stated that much interest had been shown in Canadian Seed potatoes, which had been successfully grown in the Botanical Gardens, Hong Kong. Lady Peel, among others, had made enquiries regarding them.

In the motoring section of the Fair business was satisfactory to the various exhibitors.

Motor Car Sales

The Hong Kong Hotel Garage had just completed the sale of a Bedford truck to the Canton Government, and a Vauxhall Cadet Saloon to Tai Tung, Esq., of Canton, when interviewed by the "China Mail." This firm reported that good business was being done. Messrs. Alex Ross & Co., reported that the sale of about one dozen cars had resulted either directly or indirectly from the exhibit at the Fair.

About four Canadian built Ford cars had been sold at the Fair, and other sales were in progress. Messrs. Dodwells reported that a certain number of sales had taken place among their cars, though they, in common with other exhibitors, stated that it was difficult to claim sales as a direct result of the Fair as motor cars were not sold on a stand.

Machinery Section

In the machinery section buying appeared to be steady. Messrs. Reiss Massey & Co., had sold a diesel motor a few minutes before being interviewed by the "China Mail." Their display of Diesel engines attracted a great deal of attention as they used their own motors to light stand.

The same firm had on display sundry piece goods and other types of exhibits, occupying in all three stands inside and outside the Hotel.

Messrs. Dodwells stated that they had had many enquiries regarding office equipment. Their steel cupboards had attracted much attention.

Crowds Around Stands

Inside the Hotel a constant crowd surged around the various stands. The Telephone Co., exhibits attracted a great deal of attention. Their automatic switch gear was the centre of an interested throng.

The Neonlite Sign display showed up well in the lounge and it was stated that a certain amount of business had been done by this firm.

All classes of exhibitors stated that the Fair had done a great deal to advertise their goods and they expected an increase of business as a result.

MODERN TELEPHONE EQUIPMENT.

Empire Fair Apparatus
Creates Keen Interest.

LOUD SPEAKING INSTRUMENT.

The exhibition of modern telephone equipment on display at the Empire Fair most certainly had great drawing power and throughout the whole of the Exhibition enormous crowds were concentrating around the Hong Kong Telephone Company's stall, keeping the demonstrators explaining points at high speed. Great interest was shown in the demonstration model of a miniature Automatic Exchange which extended the full length of the stall. This set was used by the visitors and through it the actions of the various switches could be watched.

Of further interest was the Loud Speaking telephone, which was on show for the first time in Hong Kong. This is a really loud speaking telephone, and has the high standards of the Telephone Company built into it. It will no doubt prove a great boon to the busy business man who wishes to have both hands free when telephoning.

Teleprinters certainly proved a great attraction. A complete teleprinter circuit was installed, and it was possible to watch messages being transmitted and received simultaneously. Another teleprinter was installed at the end of the stand and was used for the transmission of messages from the Exhibition itself to the central office of the Hong Kong Telephone Co. This service was in great demand.

A manhole with workmen splicing cables continuously attracted numbers of visitors who were interested in the engineering side of the work.

Other exhibits included the latest type combined handset telephones in various colours, and it is expected that these will prove extremely popular in modernistic furnished apartments.

The Public Address System which was used for broadcasting various announcements advertising the merchandise of the many exhibitors at the Fair proved a great success.

STUNT FLYING DISPLAY

An Aeroplane.

KWANGSI AIR FORCE OFFICIALS
WATCH FLIGHT.

Swooping out of the sky at more than 200 miles per hour, Mr. A. V. Harvey, Manager and Chief Test Pilot of the Far Eastern Aviation Company Ltd., thrilled thousands of spectators who gathered around the Empire Fair yesterday evening to watch the demonstration of the Armstrong Panther 16.

Shortly after 5.30 p.m. the aeroplane passed over the Peninsula Hotel flying low before climbing rapidly to about 2,000 feet to commence a fine exhibition of "stunt" flying.

After a series of loops, Mr. Harvey put his machine into slow and quick rolls before banking steeply to 2,500 feet. This performance was followed by a series of full loops with half rolls off the top, after which, growing tired of "normal" flying, Mr. Harvey turned the machine over and flew for a mile on his "back," ending with a few flick rolls at about 160 miles per hour.

The diving and climbing capabilities of the machine were then

To-Day's Short Story.

THE DUTCH DEFENCE

By Eric
Ambrose.

THIS is a tale that was first told before the days of the great Staunton, when the openings at chess had not been standardised and the various replies and variations computed with almost mathematical precision.

It is a tale of Russia, Holy Russia, almost a folk-story, and perhaps, like all folk-stories, has gathered unto itself little additions, which, if not entirely true, add a charm to the telling, while the main theme of the narrative is preserved.

I heard it from my father many years ago. We were playing chess at the time, and I, a learner, was receiving instruction on the replies to the various openings, for my father, though not a great player, was well versed in the theory of the game.

I remember that particular morning vividly. My father, playing White, had opened with the Queen's pawn to Queen's fourth, and I had replied with the Pawn to King's Bishop's fourth, the legitimate reply in the so-called Dutch Defence.

He had replied with Pawn to Queen's Bishop's fourth, and I was about to continue Pawn to King's three, which is the usual reply, when something prompted me to push up my Bishop's Pawn one square, thus cramping the Queen's side.

I remember well the look of surprise, almost awe on my father's face as I played that simple little move. He asked me where I had seen it before, and when I replied that it was but a sudden impulse, and a bad one at that, he grew excited; nor was he an excitable man. He told me that the only time that he himself had actually seen the reply P-B3 was when the Master Pillsbury was playing a blindfold contest.

He remembered it so very clearly because of an old story he had once heard; he had never seen the story in print, but his father, my grandfather, had told it to him just as he had heard it from his father. Perhaps I in turn would hand it on.

Paris.

A lone yachtsman and tennis star, has arrived at St. Vincent, Cape Verde Islands after a 21 days' voyage from Casablanca.

He is sailing his new yacht, the Alsin Gerbault, which flies his own flag.

He set off from Marseilles last autumn, slipping unnoticed out of the harbour.

The hardest part of his task now lies ahead of him. He is bound for the West Indies and will have the extent of the Atlantic to cross.

His way will then be through the Panama Canal and so to the South Seas.—Reuter.

demonstrated, ending with "slow flying" at about 60 m.p.h. The performance which was closely watched by officials of the Kwangsi Air Force, lasted for 20 minutes.

PEAKINGESE

Two Tatars were waiting of business depressed,
As the fog from the flagstaff came floating down;
Each thought of the woman who had to be dressed,
And the Peak Tram disgorged them all sullen in town.
For men must work and women must sleep,
And stiff is the price for a perch on the Peak.
Though the overcast be groaning.

Two wives sat up at a late hour,
And they trimmed and they slimmered ere they went to town;
They sighed on the scales, squirmed under the shower,
And wept o'er a weight that would not come down.
For one must ride, and the gradients are steep,
That lead to the palaces perched on the Peak,
And the richawmen are moaning.

Two Tatars lay stretched in the club house chairs,
In stertorous coma their cars they drove;
There is prising of hands and tearing of hairs,
O'er the trade that will never come back to the town.
But Britons old custom must keep,
And gin before five, necessitates sleep.
Though the customers be phoning
"M. Pyre-Pyre."

THE HEAVY HITTERS OF BASEBALL.

Wally Berger Has Best Record To Date.

New York, May 21.

WALLY BERGER, the young out-fielder of the Boston Braves, took the lead in the home run race in the two major leagues, last week and in games played up to and including Sunday had amassed a total of ten home runs. Well behind Berger, with only seven home runs apiece, come Charles Hartnett, catcher of the Chicago Cubs, Lou Gehrig, the New York Yankees' first baseman, Charles Klein, the Philadelphia National League out-fielder, and Tony Lazzeri, the second-sacker of the Yankees.

Babe Ruth, who still has five circuit runs, failed to add to his total during the week.—United Press.

Shanghai Cricketers Who Will be seen in Colony In November

Shanghai, May 22.

OWING to the sudden state of the grounds, cricket was not possible on Saturday, but the pitches had dried sufficiently to permit their use yesterday and there were practice games at both the Cricket Club and the Recreation Club. Teams chosen from the two clubs met in a friendly game at the Recreation Club, and the result suggested that the Reds will have to engage in a great deal of very serious practice if they are to hold the S.C.C. this season, for the visitors, who were by no means the club's strongest team, won very easily by 207 to 135, and they managed this without two of their men going in to bat.

P. V. Simpson and L. F. Stokes, were mainly responsible for the S.C.C. total, the former, who was one of the opening batsmen, staying on for a well-played 40. Stokes, however, with his vigorous hitting, more than doubled this score and had put up an excellent contribution of 84 before P. Kermani dismissed him with a catch off Isaacs.

S. R. Kermani and S. V. Gash made gallant attempts to work up a good response from the Reds, but both eventually succumbed to Leach, the first-named for 21 and Gash for 34. Leach was particularly effective, taking four wickets for nineteen runs, and Mansel-Smith also bowled well.

PONY RACING IN SHANGHAI

Commenced By Hong IN 1858

ADVENT OF CHINA PONY

Shanghai, May 21. RACING in Shanghai appears to have been a popular sport since 1858 and even earlier, and it would probably be of interest to enthusiasts to know that prior to 1863 racing here was carried on by the big foreign hong, such as Jardines, Reiss and Dents.

Records of the races are now very difficult to obtain, even if existent. There is a water-colour painting, cleverly executed, (by a Naval Officer and presented to the Race Club, (by the late Jenner Hogg) entitled "Racing in Shanghai in 1858," in which the course was apparently very ill defined, as rails are conspicuous by their absence. This probably constitutes the first record of the sport here. The China pony, so-called, had not at that time been adopted by the racing community, and racing was confined to horses imported from India and England. Later, a Riding Club was formed and needing land on which to play cricket, they used the same ground, but, however, this was the foundation of the present Shanghai Race Club.

Back in 1863. In 1863, the present Race Course was purchased by the Shanghai Race Club at a cost of $25.00 per mow (i.e. the Grass Course), with a payment of $1.00 per mow to the then owners of the interior for the "Right of View" over the interior.

A village of some 70 houses occupying about 1 mow was also bought by the S. R. C. This stood opposite the recently demolished Grandstand. These houses were pulled down and a clear view all round was obtained. The following year, the Recreation Fund Trustees, through the kind aid of H.B.M.'s Consul, who had acted for the S.R.C. in the purchase of the Grass Course in the previous year, bought the whole of the interior of the Grass Course for a Public Recreation Ground, selling the land they already owned inside the Settlement and near Thibet Road, where the races had previously been held (Pakhoi Road shows the curve of the old race course).

The China Pony. When the present course had been laid out, the China pony supplanted the imported horses and has proved in every way, better adapted for amateur racing in China. His weight carrying power, his cheapness, his capacity for all-round hard work rendering him ideal for the purposes of young men who could not afford the cost of a thorough-bred, nor ride the weight under which they raced.

Racing flourished, but the Club was simply a Racing Club and the Grandstand was closed between the training seasons, March 1 to May 10 and September 1 to November 10. In 1885, the total revenue of the Club only amounted to inside $20,000.00. In 1887, a few restless young men managed to get the Stewards to allow the Coffee Room to be used every morning of the year, and gradually, also, in the evening and that, apparently, was the genesis of the present popularity of the Club which from that time it rapidly grew in importance.

Of these young men who did so much for the Club, only two are now left Messrs. H. H. Read and D. W. Crawford. The premises at that time only reached as far as about the middle of the present Guests' Stand. The old Belle View Stand came next, then four semi-detached houses belonging to the late Mr. Henry Morris. Beyond them was Mr. Morris' houses and grounds, Mohawk Lodge. All this property at various times has been acquired by the S.R.C., mainly through the efforts of Mr. H. H. Read, the present Hon. Treasurer of the Club.

Walers Imported. In 1900, during the "Boxer" outbreak, no grass was obtainable from the North and "Walers" were imported from Sydney—a "mob" of 70 arriving at the end of February 1901, to be raced in May.

They arrived in a terrible emaciated condition, owing to a rough passage, but notwithstanding provided quite good sport. Another batch was imported the following winter, but conditions being again normal in the North the China Pony once more came into his own and the last race for walers was run in May 1903.

In 1874, certain parties challenged the Race Club's "Right over the interior of the course," which resulted in a famous case in H.B.M. Supreme Court, which lasted about a month.

Sir Edmund Hornsby, who heard the case, gave judgment absolutely in favour of the Race Club and clearly laid down that the Recreation Fund Trustees had purchased the interior subject to this right of view of the Race Club and furthermore, that they held this land "in trust" as a Recreation ground for ever. It could not be sold. This case created extraordinary interest at the time and the foreign community was clearly divided into two camps over the question.

Looking Back. A rather interesting narrative pertaining to the why and wherefore of pany racing in Shanghai, is contained in an issue of the monthly journal "The Far East," published in 1877. The article follows:

When Lord Elgin, a good, kind-hearted man, wrote of the tea-tasters of China, that their must be a good profession, inasmuch as whenever he took his maternal walk, he met many of them on horseback, we think his lordship was hardly so considerate as usual. He did not realise that, real life lord, and Ambassador Extraordinary of Her Britannic Majesty, though he was, he was but a sojourner for a very short time in these far-eastern regions, and that he had an infinite change of scene, change of amusement, change of occupation and experiences; whilst they from year's end to year's end were confined to the gin-house round, without change, without variety in social intercourse, or in daily employment. His Excellency, landing from the ship in which he had so long had his home, was doubtless glad to stretch his legs ashore, and rising, as every sensible man does, betimes in the morning, and enjoying a brisk walk in its first freshness, his health good, his spirit high, and with no personal cares to worry him, it would seem almost unnatural, had he preferred equestrian exercise to pedestrian. To him everything was new; and we all know how we like to move about among strange people in new places, and observe and take notes.

But with the men he spoke of, it was different. Their life was comparatively hum-drum. The manners and customs of the natives had long ceased to possess attractions for them—even if it ever had any. They saw no beauty in a grave, infested, plain; and the narrow pathways infested with barking curs, were positively repulsive.

Is it very much to be wondered at, that those gentlemen who could afford to keep ponies, should prefer doing so, and mounting them as early dawn, for constitutional exercise, to either tossing about in bed, or killing time listlessly until business called them to labour?

Beneficial Effect. So it is that we think that our races and other sports have a very beneficial effect. There is nothing—not even church-going—that may not be abused; and we suppose that none would close the church doors, for fear hypocrites would enter. In like manner we are of those who would not only not stop, but would greatly encourage many sports and exercises of all kinds; always hoping and, in our communities, believing, that the good they do far exceed the evil.

It is a pleasant thing to rise with the day and however early one may be, to find that there are plenty of others as early or even earlier. To see men full of life, health and strength, equipped for volunteer drill; or in their flannels, walking and training, for athletic sports and boating competitions; or keeping themselves in heart by a good exhilarating gallop around the Race-course. For what is there so inspiring, so life-giving as a brisk ride? And what more

DE MINIMIS FOR CLASSIC TO-DAY

Crack Chinese Jockey Riding.

WARRINGTON AND IMPERIAL HALL DOUBTFUL

Mr. Heard's Bad Luck.

MR. JIMMY POTE-HUNT TO MAKE DEBUT

(By RAPIER)

MR. S. N. PAN, the crack Chinese jockey is taking out De Minimis in the Second Spring Subscription Griffins Champions at the Valley this afternoon, and I am confident that the pony has it in him to win.

National Day (Mr. Benny Proulx) is the biggest danger, with Gay Butterfly (Mr. Heard) as another likely contender.

Mr. J. W. Pote-Hunt, who topped the jockeys' list at the Shanghai Spring Meeting, will be riding at the Valley to-day. He has among other mounts—Solar Star and The Crook, two ponies that require watching.

There will probably be a very small field in the May Handicap. I hear Gay Crusader is not starting, so that leaves only Bag and Baggage (Mr. Heard), Sadko (Mr. Butler), Sitting Bull (Mr. Frost), and King's Justice (Mr. Proulx) as the probable starters. I think they will finish in that order with Bag and Baggage tearing up the course.

I hear that Warrington may not go out in the Lama Handicap. This will rob Mr. Heard of another win. In that case I fancy the chances of King Salmon, though Mr. da Roza may not be able to make the weight. Amoy and Iron Grey, the latter at 149, may fill the places in a very open race.

Imperial Hall, who is suffering from a puffed leg, will not be as dangerous as he would have been had he been fit. If he goes out in the Lantao Handicap Mr. Heard will do well to secure a place. Helvellyn (Mr. Frost), Devon (Mr. Butler) and Krata Viz (Mr. Fischer) look good in this race.

White Butterfly is not going out in the Novices race, and should do well in the Crocodile Handicap.

GOLF AS I SEE IT.

Stance And The Factors That Determine It.

OPEN v. SQUARE

Stance in golf, like Easter in the calendar, is movable.

Players should learn to make the various necessary adjustments to suit the particular shot in question.

Various factors have to be considered, such as the club that is being used, whether the shot is with or against the wind, the lie of the ball, and last but by no means least, the physique of the player.

The stance can be divided into two main categories, the square and the open. In the first, the feet are placed one on either side of the ball.

Which should be, of course, a comfortable distance from the player and equidistant from it. In other words, the ball lies at the apex of an equilateral triangle, of which the feet mark the angles of the base.

In the open stance, the left foot is taken away from the straight line it made with the right foot in the square stance, and is placed in a position so that a line drawn from the toe of the left foot would strike the middle of the right foot, instead of, as in the square stance, striking the toe of the right foot.

For the average player, the open stance is to be advocated, because it generally gives a greater sense of security and will not tend to miss shots if the correct pivotal action is missing. But let the player beware that this stance is not overdone, otherwise a perfectly horrible "slice" will result, caused by the bringing of the club head across the line of flight, instead of up and down that line.

A stance that is over-open brings the ball too far forward, so that the clubhead meets the ball at an angle, the body is twisting, and the ball is being struck with the toe of the club.

The square stance is the ideal stance for the more advanced golfer, who has control over his swing, and is able to put it bluntly, knows what he is about. But for all golfers it is advisable to make the stance less and less open when iron clubs are used, instead of wooden clubs, because the hitting down action on the ball in iron play, as against the through the ball with wooden clubs, is not possible if the stance is kept equally open.

When the ball is to be played against the wind instead of with it, take it more off the right foot, which keeps the ball down and helps it to bore its way through the wind. The grip on the club should be slightly shortened and, if anything, the swing slightly curtailed, as both these latter factors tend to give better control.

With regard to the lie of the ball, I have in mind the occasions upon which the stance is not normal, that is, the player is not standing on a level with the ball. But before speaking of the stance, one word of advice. Play the shot very easily and with extreme ease, swinging slowly and keeping the club under control.

Suppose that the ball is to be played on a lie that is above the stance, or, as it is commonly put, when the player is standing below his ball. The player feels cramped, because his arms are made for this, as the arc of the swing will be shorter, and there will be a tendency to fall away from the ball, causing a slice or a feeling that the ball will be hit on the toe of the club. The slow swing will help to keep the balance adjusted and a correction in the address of the ball will do away with any chance of the latter mistake.

If the player is standing above his ball, the procedure is the reverse. The grip is to be lengthened and the stance made to be watched throughout the shot to see that the balance does not fall forward, even as it tended to fall back when standing below the ball.

The arc of the swing is lengthened, so that again careful timing is necessary. The player will have a feeling that he must reach for the ball, and will probably bend the body over from the waist. This method of overreaching is not a safe one, and a better method is to allow the knees to sag slightly.

There is a strong tendency among less open players to keep their feet too far apart, and to keep the weight on the back foot, and to keep the ball with wooden clubs, is not possible if the stance is kept equally open.

cure this fault by putting a little more weight on to the left foot, and by keeping his stomach tucked away from his hands as much as possible.

The lightly-built golfer who is striving for length is very often to be seen playing his shots with a little pull, to make them run, and to keep on with his heavier built and possibly longer driving compadres.

But the day will come when the pull becomes a hook to mid-wicket, and that is a sure sign that he is playing the ball too much off his right foot.

Let him now, his stance may be correct, and see that his swing is not over-hurried, and he will be down the middle again.—(China Mail Copy)

A VERY SIMPLE CUP FINAL

In Which the Better Footballers Won.

THOSE "MISTAKES"

By ROLAND ALLEN.

London, May 1.

IT would be groping after sensationalism to assert that Everton won the Cup because Langford, in the Manchester City goal, lost his head and made two tragic mistakes. He made several mistakes; so did all the others. There were "nerves" as usual. I do not remember a Cup Final or any other football match in which somebody did not make a mistake. Langford also made the two most brilliant saves in the match.

Everton won the Cup because they played the better football. Elementary. Why try to surround such a simple fact with a number of psychological complications just to make a story.

It was a match of mistakes. Everton missed as many chances—cast iron chances, too—as they turned to account. Manchester City hardly ever gave themselves a chance. They appeared to be scared of holding on to the ball long enough to tame it. They were in too much of a hurry all ways. They had obviously gambled on the possibility of dictating the game by running Everton off their feet.

NEED NOT BE SO.

I am glad that Everton won—not because I was almost alone in forecasting that they would, but because football ought to count even in the English Cup final. One gets a bit tired of seeing this shop-window game decided by accident. It should not be so. Everton did a lot for football in general and this Cup scramble in particular by demonstrating that it need not be so.

When I say that Everton won this match with the better football I would add that I shall not remember it for ten minutes for its quality. There is nothing unusual about that, so far as the Cup final is concerned. The three goals which Everton scored were just ordinary goals. I have seen dozens like them. Two of them were registered because Dean positioned himself correctly—as he frequently does—and the other was precisely similar except that it was Dunn instead of Dean who thought swiftly.

AS NEAR AS EVER. I have not forgotten that Stein actually kicked the ball into the net for the first one; but if Dean had not been worrying Langford—which is a part of Dean's business—that he does particularly well—the outside-left would not have found the ball at his feet and nobody and nothing to stop him. I still believe that the ball came from Dean and not from Langford to the foot of Stein. Not that it was that quality counted. I would not grumble about that—or call it tragic.

interesting and satisfactory than training and reducing to docility, the wild divilment of a China pony.

Maintain Interest.

Our friends at home should not fancy that we lose all love for healthy exercises in these lands, where we are generally supposed to take our ease, at drink, and—get liver complaint. 'Tis true enough that in our homes we let our servants do much for us that we should probably do for ourselves in our old homes; but that is quite apart from our business or our pleasure. The late Mr. H. Lang, in his lecture entitled "Shanghai Considered Socially," mentions, in addition to our Race-course, cricket ground, racquet court, and the clubs connected with them respectively: "a well appointed gymnasium, giving a series of athletic sports with appropriate prizes annually; a rowing club, supported with great spirit; a yacht club which has given very successful over a heavy country intersected regattas; a pony paper hunt, which over a heavy country interested with many water-courses, invariably crowns the winner with mud and glory; a football club, promoting a lively circulation of the blood during frosty weather; with a rifle and gun club, whose exercises are well fitted to develop steadiness, promptitude and precision among our young men; while croquet and race, Masonic, Bachelor and Butterfly Balls, show that our ladies are not neglected. Indeed, when one comes to think of it, it is astonishing in how many ways provision is made for the leisure hours of the community."

Yes. This is so. And add to these again the Volunteer corps, the Fire Brigades and Hook and Ladder Companies, a Base-Ball Club—every one of which is carried and conducted with energy—and it will easily be seen, that a millipede is a very needless character in the Far East.

In most of the open ports in China and Japan where there are a sufficient number of foreign residents, they manage to get up a Spring and Autumn Race meeting. In Shanghai, the Spring meeting this year was held on Monday, April 30 and two following days—Shanghai Sunday Times.

did Manchester City play such good football as Everton. There was no system, no policy, about either department of the losing side—unless you call kicking a football hard and hoping for the best a policy. Everton played as near to their normal football as teams customarily do on the nerve-shaking occasion. So did Manchester City, except that they were the more scared. They have always been better-sellers, slap-dash raiders. Everton have always been artists.

The only extraordinary thing about this otherwise drab game was that quality counted. I would not grumble about that—or call it tragic.

Neither in defence nor in attack.

FOOD AND HOME ECONOMICS

Perfect Table Manners Mark Socially Poised

Art Acquired By Definite Knowledge Of Silver, How Foods Are Eaten.

Only definite knowledge of table manners gives one unquestioned grace and poise, but there are two factors in favour of any one uncertain about correct mealtime etiquette.

If a slip is made, the chances are that it will pass unnoticed if one doesn't call attention to it by obvious embarrassment.

Again, holding back a bit to see what others do in the business of eating a particular food or choosing a particular piece of silver practically insures doing the correct thing.

The Preliminaries.

Men draw back women's chairs, or at least remain standing until they are seated. The hostess sits down first, then the other women.

A diner sits upright in his chair and does not fiddle with silver. The napkin is only half unfolded and laid across the lap.

In restaurants when a man and woman are dining or lunching the woman gives her order to the man, who relays it to the waiter.

When Preparing Club Celery

Place In Icy Cold Water For Eating.

Club Celery

When preparing celery for the table, clean it thoroughly and then cut the thick stalks lengthwise into very narrow strips with a sharp knife, down to within an inch of the top end of the stalk. Place in icy cold water and they will twist and curl and look oddly attractive and be easier to eat than the big thick stalks.

PLANTS IN HOUSE ARE CHEERY

Enamelled Flower Pots Add Colour.

There is nothing like growing and blooming plants to cheer a home. For very little money now you can get flowers aplenty.

There are also inexpensive plants all started in their own fertile soil that you merely place, soil and all, in a bowl or pot.

One excellent idea for cheering the home is to take ordinary flower pots, each planted in some ivy or a bulb, and enamel each one a different colour for a blooming window.

If you prefer, you can have greenery in each one and paint the pots cherry red, or some red and some gold. If you paint pots with blooms that will be out soon, be sure your colour scheme goes well with the shade of the bloom.

Children usually love flowers and taking care of the plants affords a pleasant chore for any boy or girl from eight years onward.

Extinguishers In Home

Should Be Always At Hand.

Small fire extinguishers, easy to manipulate, and containing fluids that will not injure fabrics, should be kept in your home.

Food Scraps Can Be Used

Cutting Waste In The Kitchen.

There are many little ways of getting all the valuable parts of food when it is being cooked, careful attention to which will in time cut grocery and meat bills.

Bacon fat, if properly cooked, is good to use for browning foods, for seasoning and for adding flavour to soups and stews. When cooking bacon, pour off the fat as soon as it melts. With every pound of bacon you will find nearly a cup of fat.

PRAWNS FAVOURITE TIFFIN DISH

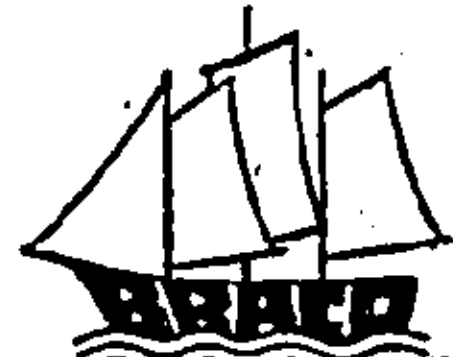

Devilled And Preserved In Ramekins.

Prawns are a favourite tiffin preparation with most of us, and there are dozens of fascinating ways to prepare them, from hors d'oeuvres, cocktails entrees, or the chief tiffin dish, to a variety of delectable salads. They are delicious when devilled and served in ramekins or scallop shells for an entree.

Cream of new green pea soup with tomato is a "somewhat different" soup combination that you will also like as well as Creole salad garnished with crisp hearts of lettuce. An almond omelet will also be appreciated for its fine flavour as well as for its newness.

If you are reluctant in letting your cook try his hand at the new dishes, an excellent thing to do, is to tell him to get everything all ready and then you can stand over him, instructing him just how to proceed.

If you have the time to devote to this task, you will be surprised just how quickly he will learn. If he is permitted to go ahead blindly, the results are not always just what they should be.

The Dutch Defence

was broken by the noise as of a great band of horsemen, so that those in the houses at the beginning of the straight village street rose to their feet, pale and biting their lips, and even the children, who could not understand the significance of those drum beats of death, were silenced, as though they sensed the approach of the Angel of Death.

To the Morgansterns at the far end of the village street, where the newer cottages had been built, came the sound of the hoof beats and the shouts of drunken men; men not besotted with alcohol, but drunk with the thought of blood to spill. And then through the village the cry was taken up: "The Cossacks are coming!"—and mothers gathered to their breasts their infants, and the older children, terrified by the clamour, clung to their mothers' skirts. The pogrom had commenced, and Chaim Morganstern prepared for flight. He stopped only long enough for all of them to don thick coats and boots, for they were to lie in the fields till the Cossacks had gone; he sent his wife and child out through the back door, and a sudden thought made him turn. He locked the front door that would save time. He left the oil lamp burning and returned to the back door. As he slipped out there was a rifle shot, and he fell prone across the firethold.

He did not see the magnificent form of the soldier who approached, chuckling softly, to take from him the little bag of gold which he knew the refugees always carried with them in case of emergency, nor did he feel the two stabs with the knife that he had realised for a knife was far too valuable to leave on such a one as Chaim Morganstern.

But they found him the next morning; Menchikoff, the little bootmaker, who went over the body of his Jewish friend, and carried it to his house. He had placed his hand with in the coat to feel the heart, and had withdrawn it all bloody.

But when Petrovitch, the doctor, first saw the frozen body, he broke down and wept, for he had been his great friend. They were a simple God-fearing community in that little village; Petrovitch was surprised, and Menchikoff, terrified, when Chaim Morganstern rose from the couch where he had lain, and asked whether his wife and children were safe.

They lied to him, for they could not tell that the body of his wife was but a few hundred paces from where he Chaim, lay—a body bearing the trade-mark of the Cossack; and, the boy, whose name was missing, was, but many were missing. Perhaps soon with the thaw their bodies would be found, for the snow which had continued to fall through-out that bloody night had covered with a white pall, stained here and there with crimson, the victims of re-

Each offered to the other the advantage of the first move, but eventually it was the guest who played it very hard; but bitter as he grew, he remained true to his learning; rather did he resort to it as a haven of forgetfulness, burying himself in study.

He was still a young man when, as he noticed the eagerness that was in the faces of those who stood around him, waiting for the game to commence, he realised that the ecclesiastical seat that gave the appearance of his eyes, his mouth, in fact, all of him be spoke of an age-old wisdom, and brains that he might remember to seek his advice. He did not stay long in Berlin, journeying to Paris, where his fame had long preceded and did not know much of the young man, for he was known as the "Young Rabbi." While in Paris he made one of those peculiar friendships now called the Queen's Pawn, because he knew this, so that there was no hears of from time to time—a friendship which would have been impossible to a century or so earlier. At a salon to which the Young Rabbi had been invited by reason of the brilliancy of his conversation he had held entranced a group of elder men. He and there was a lump in the Rabbi's throat as he played, for his memory was carried back to the day when he had shown that move to the Bishop of Pavia, and the Rabbi, about to play his Knight, was suddenly struck by the strangeness of the Pope's defence. For his opponent to play that dangerous variation without real knowledge of it spelled disaster; either it was sheer bad, ignorant play on the part of the Pope, or good, solid, calculated resistance.

And mechanically he played move after move, until it came to him that his opponent was playing equally quickly and with as little apparent thought, so that he realised that this man was either a genius or one who had worked out all the intricacies of the opening, which really meant the same. But on the twelfth move by Black the Rabbi rose to his feet with a cry: "No one, no one knows that twelfth move, the 'trap' defence, no one except himself and one other—he, the Pope, before and the other, he was playing it for a week and remained unbroken in fact; it was said that no shaven for a month? With a feeling one had ever beaten him; but there were those who said that there lurked in him a strange uncontrollable temper. Once, when playing at Belu you, but no sound came from him, in England, he had risen from the board after the first move, his face black with anger, and swinging his pieces into the box, had refused to play. Apart from these lapses, he played often and well.

And so many years passed during which little is known of the history of the Rabbi. He must have passed through many vicissitudes, as can be seen from his writings, which we still have to-day. He travelled far and wide, always an honoured guest, for men liked this kindly man of whom even his intimates knew little, springing as it were from obscurity at an early age. One country he never visited, the country which had given him birth but not refuge. Twice he had been to Italy, but on neither occasion had reached Rome. Once a plague in that city kept him from journeying south from Lombardy, and once illness had necessitated his removal to a more temperate climate. Each time he had sent a message to the Cardinal and had received a reply of great warmth.

But with the passing of the years there still lurked that early bitterness; a bitterness still shown in his later writings. It appears that he felt he would remain ending his days. But it so happened that the Cardinal he had met in Paris, and whom he had twice tried to visit, was made Pope. On the tenth anniversary of his installation, when he had reached the age of 93, which is an age which even a Pope begins to measure his days, Rabbi Morganstern, now 74, received from his old friend, whom he had met but once, a reply to his message of congratulation and an invitation, so that on his 75th birthday Rabbi Morganstern set forth upon one more pilgrimage to see that part of Italy he had never seen.

Perhaps it was not altogether the desire to see the Pope; there are those who have advanced the suggestion that the Rabbi had found the climate of Holland unsuitable to his failing health, and longed for the warmth of Italy. But travelling was long and arduous in those days, and the Rabbi reached Italy the Pope had died, and a new Pope had been elected. But the Rabbi, ignorant of this, journeyed on, and when in Florence he learned the news, he remained some time, until the celebrations over the new election had subsided. On reaching Rome he found that his fame had preceded him; for a chess player while moving reason for his visit was known, for there were several in Rome he had met before, so that he was welcomed as befitted one of his scholarly station.

Now it so happened that the Pope, like so many of the other ecclesiastics, as he had already explained, enjoyed the checker-board game, and because of this, and because he was a great Hebrew scholar, the Pope, who was writing a learned dissertation, "sent to the Rabbi, and asked that he might see him. It was not the first time that such a meeting had taken place.

And because he in turn respected the great scholar who had become Pope at so early an age, he, the Rabbi, accepted the invitation. So it happened that one day the Rabbi walked in the grounds of the Vatican, and conversed with the Pope upon various subjects, and while they spoke of controversial matters, the Pope, who in turn might have been speaking to a Canon of the Church.

And when the dusk drew on, the Pope, loath to lose his visitor, suggested that they should play chess. So the lamps were lit, and they seated themselves before the ungainly chessmen.

Each offered to the other the advantage of the first move, but eventually it was the guest who played it very hard; but bitter as he grew, he remained true to his learning; rather did he resort to it as a haven of forgetfulness, burying himself in study.

He was still a young man when, as he noticed the eagerness that was in the faces of those who stood around him, waiting for the game to commence, he realised that the ecclesiastical seat that gave the appearance of his eyes, his mouth, in fact, all of him be spoke of an age-old wisdom, and brains that he might remember to seek his advice. He did not stay long in Berlin, journeying to Paris, where his fame had long preceded and did not know much of the young man, for he was known as the "Young Rabbi." While in Paris he made one of those peculiar friendships now called the Queen's Pawn, because he knew this, so that there was no hears of from time to time—a friendship which would have been impossible to a century or so earlier. At a salon to which the Young Rabbi had been invited by reason of the brilliancy of his conversation he had held entranced a group of elder men. He and there was a lump in the Rabbi's throat as he played, for his memory was carried back to the day when he had shown that move to the Bishop of Pavia, and the Rabbi, about to play his Knight, was suddenly struck by the strangeness of the Pope's defence. For his opponent to play that dangerous variation without real knowledge of it spelled disaster; either it was sheer bad, ignorant play on the part of the Pope, or good, solid, calculated resistance.

And mechanically he played move after move, until it came to him that his opponent was playing equally quickly and with as little apparent thought, so that he realised that this man was either a genius or one who had worked out all the intricacies of the opening, which really meant the same. But on the twelfth move by Black the Rabbi rose to his feet with a cry: "No one, no one knows that twelfth move, the 'trap' defence, no one except himself and one other—he, the Pope, before and the other, he was playing it for a week and remained unbroken in fact; it was said that no shaven for a month? With a feeling one had ever beaten him; but there were those who said that there lurked in him a strange uncontrollable temper. Once, when playing at Belu you, but no sound came from him, in England, he had risen from the board after the first move, his face black with anger, and swinging his pieces into the box, had refused to play. Apart from these lapses, he played often and well.

those whom he wished to beat. Always he had managed to bring out some variation to combat those who found answers to his efforts, so that now he looked at the Rabbi, and asked him gently what ailed him, but the Rabbi, unable to answer him, continued to look at him so that the ecclesiastic grew embarrassed beneath the strange, almost maniacal stare. Then the Rabbi spoke. "The answer to that move is this," he said, and still without taking his eye from his opponent's face refused the proffered knight in exchange for a bishop, and made some apparently irrelevant move.

The Pope showed a mild surprise. "You are," he said to the Rabbi, "indeed a great player. I have only once before seen a man play that way, and that was many years ago." He looked at the Rabbi, who now was listening with his whole body, it seemed drawn up like an animal about to spring, his eyes burning brightly. "Go on," said the Rabbi, in a terrible voice, and somehow, to the annoyance of those who stood around, the Pope obeyed. "That was many years ago my master taught me that move; he was a Jew, and it was from him I learnt Hebrew. It was before I suffered from a terrible illness in my sixth year, and my father, a Russian soldier, brought me to Moscow. I know little of my history before that time, and can remember practically nothing. I went to a convent, while my father went away to fight; he must have been killed, for he never returned. Sometimes I feel I should like to have known the name of the man who taught me Hebrew, for it has been so useful in my Holy studies. Had I known his name, or something about him, I would have sought for him, and perhaps had it been in my power, rewarded him a little. He also taught me chess; I believe he also spoke to me about his religion. But the illness obliterated practically all memory of him. That he was a kindly man I know, and when in later life I came to Rome, and was a Jew, and it was from him that good man my attitude was always tolerant to the members of your race."

And as he finished speaking the Pope smiled at the older man. But he seemed to the onlookers that he was not attending. His head rolled from side to side, so that they thought he was asleep.

THE DUTCH DEFENCE.

he was in a fit. It seemed also as though the words of the Pope had aroused some terrible memories in the old man's mind, for now the tears coursed down his cheeks. Someone whispered to the Pope that as a young man he had lost a son, as some said, murdered, and the Pope, understanding, nodded his head. So they led him away, while the Pope looked regretfully at the unfinished game, which had promised so well, but had ended so unhappily.

It was only when the Rabbi left that a sudden idea came to him, and rapidly he made his calculations, so that a conviction came to him that this old man was his teacher of long ago. But when he sent for him some hours had already elapsed, and the Rabbi had left Rome. But he did not travel far, for illness overtook him.

Rabbi Akiba, of Florence, who was present at his death, learnt the true story; he says in his history that "The Rabbi Morgenshtern, of Amsterdam, passed very peacefully, an hour after sunset of the third day of his illness. After telling me what he had learnt at Rome, he turned to me, and said with a smile, "And so my son was indeed a great scholar, Reb, was he not?"

And so hiding even from me the bitterness that must have been in his heart at that moment, he did not speak again, until just before the end, when he recited the Shema.

When the Pope learned of the death of him whom he was certain had been his master, he sent a wreath. But I could not place it on the coffin, for the religion forbade it.

From that day to this I have never played the Dutch Defence, for to me it seems somehow sacred.

MYSTERY SHIPS ARE DESIGNED FOR SOVIETS

Burmeister And Wain Perfect New Engine.

Burmeister and Wain, Ltd., famous for their diesel engines, are now experimenting with a new type of steamship engine.

"A great amount of secrecy has surrounded the B. and W. experiment at improving steamship technique," says the "Scandinavian Shipping Gazette," but it is known that these improvements have been embodied in the construction of the steamer Tiribirka and Indiga, the two ships recently delivered to Soviet Russia from the famous Copenhagen yard.

The improvements will also be supplied to another new ship for Soviet Russia, in which will be fitted a double compound 2,450 h.p. engine with two high-pressure and two low-pressure cylinders. The coal consumption is brought down to a minimum, it is reported, in this B. and W. innovation.

The management of Burmeister and Wain have recently been compelled to apply to the banks and the Government for assistance, owing to a lack of ready cash.

SPEED AS LESSON NATURE.

Norman puts the average rate of progress of salmon at seven miles an hour and that of pike from eight to 10 miles an hour, while Mr. Frohawk considers a pike capable of 15 miles an hour when frightened, and a salmon of about 25. Eels probably do 15 for a short burst.

Meanwhile, Colonel Harding with his glass tanks and underwater observations is patiently investigating the whole subject in the rural peace of Dorset. When the full facts are known, perhaps our naval architects will get to work with new vigour. The present-day, super-modern Bremen is only a fraction faster than the Mauretania, launched more than 20 years ago. Southampton and the Tyne have a lot to learn from the humble fishermen.

YORKSHIRE AGAIN PROVE TRIUMPHANT
Fine bowling by Martindale, the West Indies fast bowler, gave the tourists their fifth win on tour, Hampshire collapsing for 149 after a first innings total of 306.
Notts, who have yet to record their first championship win, beat Cambridge University, conquerors of Yorkshire. Jehangir Khan, who played for the All-India team in England last season, scored a stylish 112.
Sam Staples took 8 for 72 and Arthur Carr, the Notts skipper, hit a hurricane 123 to provide the other features of the match.
Barber, who scored 120 not out for Yorkshire, is not to be confused with A. T. Barber, the former Oxford and Yorkshire skipper who occasionally turns out for the champions. W. Barber is a promising youth on the Headingly ground staff.

It was revealed that Mr. Woodin was formerly on the list of bank officials and directors under an obligation to Morgan's.
Senator Borah is leading the attack on Mr. Woodin. He declared that the American people, in these times, when such tremendous powers are exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury Department, are entitled to expect that, like Caesar's wife, he should be above suspicion.—Reuter.
